Learner Outcomes

- At the end of the presentation, participants will be able to:
- Explain current intervention practices across the language learning continuum that integrate literacy-based approaches.
 - List three goals, one for each literacy level, that are contextually relevant and curriculum-based.
 - Demonstrate the importance of the disciplinary literacies in the intervention choices of speech-language pathologists (SLPs) and other team members.
 - Analyze the difference among language knowledge, skills and strategies that relate to intervention decisions.
 - Summarize two cautionary themes related to overuse of labels in the identification and treatment of students with language, learning and reading disabilities.

Faculty - Geraldine P. Wallach, PhD, CCC-SLP

Dr. Geraldine Wallach is a professor and thesis coordinator in the Department of Speech-Language Pathology at California State University, Long Beach, in Long Beach, California. She teaches courses in childhood and school-age language disorders, assessment, phonology and language development. She has been published widely on school-age language disorders including her most recent book: Language Intervention for School-Age Students: Setting Goals for Academic Success. An editor of the recent text: Handbook of Language and Literacy: Development and Disorders (NY: Guilford Press, 2014), she has been one of three Americans involved in a teacher training project in Guangzhou, China. In May 2005, she was chosen as "Most Valuable Professor" for the School of Health and Human Services at California State University, Long Beach. Her current efforts are directed toward developing clinical and educational materials in language and literacy and continuing her research efforts in language comprehension and metalinguistic awareness. She prides herself in being a school-based professional and is committed to issues in education and the expanding role of speech-language pathologists in literacy.

Abstract

The workshop will cover the continuum from foundation literacy through content-based literacy to disciplinary literacy. As the distinctive and changing role of language ability across literacy "levels" is highlighted, goals and objectives as well as student and professionals' expectations and questionable practices will be addressed. With a focus on the continuum from early elementary school to middle and high school levels, the questions: What should language-literacy based intervention "look like" at each level? and What is/are the role(s) of collaborative team members within a shared literacy environment? will be asked. A focus on meaning-based and organizational strategies will underpin the themes introduced within the conference.

The mission of the New Jersey Speech-Language-Hearing Association (NJSHA) is to serve audiologists, speech-language pathologists, and speech, language or hearing scientists by providing resources, information, programs, and services that meet members' needs; promoting public awareness; and advocating for professional standards, legislation, and regulation necessary to provide the highest quality of care for the individuals they serve.

The International Dyslexia Association is a non-profit Scientific and Education organization for the study and treatment of children with specific language disability (dyslexia). The New Jersey branch does not endorse any specific program; it supports efforts to provide individuals with dyslexia with appropriate instruction and to identify these individuals at an early age.
